

Do Guys Who Study Seduction Take Unfair Advantage Of Unsuspecting Women?

Unless notified otherwise, you may feel free to distribute this report in its entirety, in pdf format, with all links in tact and unchanged, as long as you do NOT spam anyone. You may post this on your website, on your blog, your myspace account, online discussion group, or anywhere else you like. You may not sell this report.

The parties mentioned in this report did not contribute to this report in any way. The opinions and viewpoints expressed in this report are my own opinions, and this report is for informational and entertainment purposes only.

© 2008, James R. Knippenberg
www.mindcontrolresources.com

I just finished watching hell freeze over.

That's right; I said hell would freeze over before I ever watched the “Dr. Phil Show”.

Well, bub, I just watched it. There's a cold wind blowing in Kansas right now.

Dr. Phil did a show on seduction. It was a SKEWED show; the deck was already stacked. I'll get to that in a moment. Maybe he should stick to interviewing stars in the psych ward. Then again, maybe not... Stay tuned and decide for yourself!

And WHAT was Ross Jeffries doing by bad-mouthing the “competition” and their tactics of approaching women?

Is he trying to get ready to meet his Maker, and so is now “warning women” about sleazy pickup artists?

Or is he just trying to shoot the competition in the foot and make them look bad on national tv?

Some of you know Ross Jeffries, and there's a lot of people who think he's an egotistical, stuck up, arrogant prick. Some of you out there really LIKE the guy too. We'll get to that in a moment here...

What I find interesting is that the audience was full of people who were dressed fairly nicely, many of the women had colored hair and makeup on, in other words, they prepared to present themselves in a way that was more attractive to others, they fixed themselves up, even though the makeup, the jewelry, and the outfits are manufactured, and what you might call “fake”, but about half of the audience thought it was “ok” for a guy to learn seduction techniques in order to attract women.

Only about half of the people were opposed to a guy learning seduction techniques, at least until Phil finished brainwashing his mindless studio fan club, uhh, audience full of sheeple.

Or did he have some help?

(By the way, I'm not dissing Dr. Phil... I swore to God I'd never watch his show, and now I'm seriously considering watching it more often. Next thing you know, I'll be reading those damn Mars and Venus books... Yuck!)

The show starts off with Scott and Nick from the Mystery Method.

Any my hat's off to anyone who helps guys get more confidence and experience in social situations so they can meet and attract the types of women they want to get to know.

Now some guys do come across as mechanical and fake and insincere. Part of that is due to a learning curve that takes place whenever you start to master new skills.

However, there are also many guys how ARE fake and insincere. But there are also many women who are fake and insincere, so don't go throwing the baby out with the bath water!

Seduction skills are well worth mastering, and they make your relationships and interactions with others so much more enjoyable for you AND the other person.

I did get a laugh out of the bleached blonde who had more makeup on than Tammy Fae saying that seduction seemed fake.

I'm not knocking her. Like I said, there's a learning curve to seduction skills, and there's also a certain number of people who are fake and are just reciting patterns they got from someone else to “set the person up for the next pattern”.

Then again, someone dresses up, spends an hour or more doing makeup and hair, and they go out to a club full of phoney people and drunks, and they have no right to complain if the people they meet are phoney.

I have a good friend who used to go to bars a lot and hang out, and he often wondered why he ended up sleeping with wackos, phonies, and head-cases (he's even been stalked and had his car vandalized by a pissed off ex).

He finally figured out if he wanted to meet a higher quality person, he might start by looking for people who had similar interests and then go where those people hang out.

And, hey, I'm NOT slamming people who like to go to dance clubs or bars. Once in awhile, I like to go out dancing with some friends. Once in awhile, I'll go to a bar to kick back and relax.

But did you ever stop to think that you spend more time finding out about the TV or DVD player you're going to buy than you do finding out about the person you decide to take to bed with you?

And one of the incredible things I like most about Speed Seduction \(TM\) is that when you learn the tools and make them a part of who you really are, you start to learn things about the other person you wouldn't normally recognize, and you can rapidly and easily get to know them on an intimate level that might otherwise take 4, 5, 6 months or more of dating to find out.

Anyway...

The guys from The Mystery Method pointed out, as you already know, that a woman, throughout the course of her life, has been approached by probably thousands of guys.

Dr. Phil interjected that he has been painfully shy throughout his entire life.

I can sure identify with that.

Although when I was a kid, I had a tendency to be “mouthy,” I really had trouble with being shy and not being able to approach, meet, and ask for dates with the women I wanted to go out with.

Even in high school, when a teacher helped set me up with one of the hottest girls in the entire school, Crystal, and even when I saw her looking at me several times in class, and my teacher absolutely assured me the girl was gonna say yes if I asked her out, I had a hell of a time getting up the “courage” to ask her out.

Then when I asked, and she said yes, it was like a load fell off my back, and I about jumped through the clouds and said something dumb like “good” or “ok” or something like that, and walked away.

Well, the worst time I had asking a chick out was years later, there was a hot chick who used to cut my hair.

I tried making deals with God or the devil or anybody who would listen to me.

God and the devil didn't seem to be listening, but the guys on Ross Jeffries' Speed Seduction (TM) customers only email list were listening. And more than ready and willing to help out.

So I don't even remember what “opener” I decided to use when I went back to talk with her.

And by opener, I DON'T mean some lame-assed LIE about “Oh, did you see the two girls fighting outside and one chick's boob popped out?”

Now let's keep in mind, too, that I had ALREADY MET the woman, so my intent was to use what already happened previously in the conversation (which my at the time roommate aka cock-block had mangled to fuck up for me).

Just a quick note there: If the people you hang out with AREN'T helping you get where you want to go in life, find other people to hang out with.

Don't get me wrong. I'm one of the most loyal people on the planet. Good friends are a rare and valuable treasure.

Now having said that...

Most friendships, most jobs, most relationships happen by “default”.

The entire purpose of learning any type of seduction or mind control skills is so YOU have choice and power in your life instead of having those choices made for you.

It's NOT about how many chicks you can get in the sack. It's NOT about whether they're a 7, 8, 9, or a 10. In fact, inside of almost every person is SOMETHING about them that IS A TEN.

AND PROPER SEDUCTION SKILLS HELP YOU FIND OUT WHAT IT IS ABOUT THEM THAT IS A TEN!

I remember the very first Ross Jeffries seminar I went to (I'll tell you more about how that happened in a moment). And more than just a seduction seminar, Ross was talking about the difference between living your life on rails, where you got to wait for your train to come in, you got to go where someone else tells you to go, and you got to do it on their schedule vs. creating and living the type of life YOU choose to live.

This “contrast principle” of this vs. that is a very powerful seduction technique when used correctly, by the way.

What MOST people who only study seduction to just get laid quick miss out on is the truly powerful and transformational effect it has when you start to use the materials to change yourself from the inside out in to the type of person YOU want to be.

This is what TRUE seduction is about.

It's not about trickery and lying and trying to force her to validate she's good enough to go out with you. (Pre – qualifying a woman to see if you and her are compatible or might have something meaningful and enjoyable to share with each other is NOT the same as forcing her to validate her self-esteem and prove she's “good enough” as a person!)

And seduction is NOT about knocking her down a notch so you have social proof. Sure it's ok to kid around with people you like. But there are some nasty tactics being taught in some seduction circles on how to control women by messing with their self-image and their self-esteem.

It's nasty and sick stuff.

On the other hand, TRUE SEDUCTION is about helping the other person to feel good, it's about learning how to access that inner part of a person's being where they hold their hopes and dreams, the things they truly desire if they could suddenly wave a magic wand and get rid of all the things that stand in their way, get rid of the so-called friends who try to tell them what they can or cannot have and enjoy in life, and instead create the type of life where you have permission to explore those possibilities and opportunities that can only be accessed and unlocked from deep down, inside...

Literally helping her to discover that part of her that has been forced in to hiding in order to gain the approval of others or for whatever other social reasons, and to help her come from that place inside herself where she has the power to discover and become the woman she was truly meant to enjoy being.

Very powerful, and use it with caution and responsibility. Not everyone is ready for that type of experience. And God help you if you ever use that to take advantage of a woman, because betraying someone at that deep level of rapport makes for the worst kind of enemies.

But when used properly and with integrity and with her best interests in mind, you can create something wonderful to share and treasure together for years to come, even if you don't develop a long-term relationship with each other.

And in order to get to that point, you have to meet them, you have to create the fascination and attraction in the first place so you can see if they are ready yet to explore those kinds of feelings with you.

And as I already said, my first approach with the chick at the hair salon was FUBAR.

So I was starting with the deck stacked against me.

But in those sorts of situations, you really can FIX things so the person is attracted to you, even if you blew it from the get-go.

I'll tell you about the Dream Invader I did with her later on. Keep reading, and I'll get to it.

Anyway, I took the advice from the Speed Seduction list, and I decided to play around with it, so I actually came up with my own version, even though I didn't really have enough experience at that point to do it my own way....

And I memorized my "line" I was going to use to re-start the conversation.

I rehearsed it over and over and over again and again and again, telling myself "Don't screw this up! Don't screw this up! Don't screw this up!"

Some of you recognize the negative suggestion and negative mental rehearsal, so you know what happened...

I went to the mall where the hair salon was, I paced around rehearsing my lines (along with all the stuff that "Could" go wrong) while waiting for her to finish with her customers so it would be "ok" for me to go talk with her, and then finally...

I WALKED UP TO HER AND COULD NOT TALK!

*I made a complete ass of myself...
And it turned out to be one of the best things I ever did!*

I stuttered to put together the line I had rehearsed and screwed it up so bad, I'm surprised she didn't laugh at me.

But it turned a spark inside me in to a flame...I was DETERMINED to never have that kind of fear and humiliation happen to me ever again.

And when I went back and reported how badly I had screwed things up, Ross Jeffries invited me to his next seminar.

I put my credit card bills and everything other than my rent on hold, and I booked a flight and a hotel room.

This was back when Ross was still teaching with Yates Canipe and Mark Cunningham.

And after that seminar was over, I couldn't believe how much CONFIDENCE I had that I didn't have before.

See, here's what Dr. Phil missed: Ross teaches MORE than just seduction. I find it interesting that someone in the entertainment industry had no clue (or at least acted like he didn't) when Ross said there's a huge difference between the MARKETING and what he actually teaches. I guess if someone markets fluff and taught fluff, there isn't any difference between what they market and what they do...

There is a lot of “fluff” out there...

And in case you're wondering, whether you like the guy or not, Ross Jeffries actually DOES deliver on his promises he makes in his advertising.

If you think I'm not being fair by telling you about the first part of the show, just hold your horses. I'm getting there...

I'm actually there right now, if you've been paying attention.

And when Dr. Phil mentioned he's been painfully shy his entire life and can stand up in front of an audience but has lots of social anxiety in small groups or one on one when he has to meet someone, I had lots of flashbacks.

(If You Are Afraid Of Talking With And Meeting Women, CLICK HERE...)

Listen up, it doesn't matter one bit what happened to you in the past. What matters most is where are you right now AND WHERE DO YOU WANT TO GO?

Most people have no clue what they want...

One of the girls who got interviewed on Dr. Phil's show said she felt like she was being asked too many questions.

This is something interesting that is also covered in the book The Mystery Method (p. 166) on the section on rapport. They actually say to NOT ask a bunch of questions because it comes across as rapport seeking.

According to that section, asking a bunch of questions after establishing your value comes across as rapport seeking and as trying to force the conversation along by asking a bunch of questions.

Well, yeah, if it's done INCORRECTLY....

Hey, I like the book. I don't have their videos. I DO LIKE THEIR BOOK, and I'm NOT bashing them. Even though they lied through their teeth on Dr. Phil's show and said they are not part of the seduction community and they don't teach seduction. THE FRONT OF THE BOOK SAYS: "The Mystery Method How To Get Beautiful Women Into Bed". Their product list has "seduction" in the product descriptions (unless they've changed it since the writing of this report).

But they don't teach seduction, and they aren't part of the seduction community.

I'll bet you, though, if you ask any guy who is in the seduction community to name three or four seduction teachers or seduction companies, I damn betcha their name will come up in that list more times than not...

Just read their damn book. It's worth the $20 bucks and then some, so go get a copy of it.

I'm surprised that someone would teach one thing, and then try to white-wash what they do when confronted by it. There's NOTHING WRONG WITH SEDUCTION, when done in a way that shows respect and consideration for 1) yourself, and 2) the other person.

Leave others better off than they were when you found them, and where there is no hurt, there is no “sin”.

Their book says they teach guys how to seduce women.

Mid game and End Game (and if you can read at all, you CAN'T miss the diagram that says 7 hours from meeting them to seduction) starts on p. 183 of their book.

But they lied out their asses and said they don't teach seduction and they're not part of the seduction community.

Why would you have to lie about that? Is there something sinister or wrong about seduction skills?

Look, when you're seducing someone, you DON'T tell them you're using seduction skills. However, if you're ashamed of what you do, there's a reason for that.

Is it just because of internal “brain farts” and your own “inner demons” and prior programming that keeps you enslaved to think you're doing something immoral or evil to women by seducing them? If so, I strongly suggest you get my friend Dr. John M. La Tourrette's Inner Demon Destroyer.

But if you are truly ashamed of what you do and feel you have to cower in fear when others find out what you do, then you got to stop and ask yourself if you're really being true to your own values and ideals, if you're really being true to yourself.

If you can't get up every morning, look yourself in the mirror, and be proud of what you do and know what you're doing is consistent with your own ideals, values, hopes and dreams instead of just doing what “pays the bills” or what “gets you by” or what “makes other people like you or approve of you,” then perhaps it's time you start to do something to change all of that.

And I'm NOT “defending” Ross Jeffries here. Hell, he doesn't need my opinion or approval – just go look at the raving testimonials on his webpage.

If those guys from The Mystery Method had been on top of their game on Dr. Phil's show, they might have presented some possible objections to Ross Jeffries and his material. I'll get to that in a moment.

In all fairness, though, Ross Jeffries has had many more years of experience on talk shows and with even hostile audiences.

Still, there's no reason to be ashamed of or hide what they do, if they're acting with integrity.

Anyway, their book says not to use questions to get rapport, and those of us who have EXPERIENCED deep, probing questions while in rapport with someone know it causes “mind bombs” to go off deep down inside you, where you have your very core feelings and values and ideals about what's true for you.

Sometimes it might even be six months or a year later, and all of a sudden, something happens and triggers something the person said to you, deep inside your mind, and it's like you can't stop thinking about them, you can't get them out of your mind even if you were to try, but you don't want to get them out of your mind, because they've touched you in a place and in a way no one has ever done before...

I've had women tell me 6 months or even several years later how they think about me all the time and how they've never met anyone like me before.

And that's NOT to brag – I'm NOT the type to brag and tell locker room stories to boost my own self-esteem; it's to tell you the true power of being able to seduce a woman in the way she truly wants to feel attractive, sexy, and seduced by someone who really is interested in her as a person.

But if it's done incorrectly, sure, it comes across as manipulative or coercive or nosy...

See, though, when you know how to get rapport at a deep level with someone, and then you ask them questions that cause them to go deeper inside, it not only deepens the rapport, it also causes them to connect with a part of themselves they're not usually aware of.

So, for example, the techniques in The Mystery Method book are NOT really conducive to building THAT type of rapport and connection with someone.

A friend of mine asked for some help with a relationship.

So I told my friend to ask questions about the other person's criteria and values in a relationship.

He told me it wouldn't work, and knew it wouldn't work, and refused to learn the drill and do it.

So I figured he was too damn stupid to learn, and I changed the topic.

Then a few days later, he asks me the same question. I told him what to do again, and he gave me all these reasons why that wouldn't work ... EVEN THOUGH HE HAD NEVER DONE THE DAMN DRILL ... and tried to tell me no one would really answer those questions, people would be afraid to give real answers, yada, yada, yada...

Which told me right from the get-go he was coming at relationships from a place of insecurity and had his own “stuff” blocking his energy because he was trying to hide so no one could see – not even himself.

See, as you ask questions and talk with people, they reveal things to you about themselves that even they are not aware of. I've had married women, who swore they were happily married, tell me in just 5 minutes of conversation –the very first time I met them! – what I'd need to do to seduce them if I were to choose to do so...

As you learn how your own mind and energies and emotions work, and as you learn how to connect with others, and activate those energies that cause people to be attracted to you naturally anyways, you begin to know things about people and to touch them in ways that probably no one else has ever been able to do before. (For more on how to use the vital energies for seduction, Click Here.)

This is where a lot of guys have gone wrong with the seduction materials. They get so addicted to the incredible results of being able to go out and get laid, they forget their own values, their own criteria, what it is they wanted in the first place. Or where to go from there once they got it.

They don't learn to deal with their own insecurities and feelings of inadequacy, and instead they try to validate themselves by seeing how many chicks they can sack and then dump...

And sadly, most of them really never stopped to figure out what they want!

They know all too well what they DON'T want – they don't want to be lonely, they don't want to go to bed alone, they don't want to be afraid to talk with women, they don't want to get stuck with wacko's and head-cases...

But what is it you REALLY want...?

So I knew my friend was blowing smoke screens on me – and more importantly, on himself.

I waited until we switched topics again, and he started talking about his job.

Sometimes it helps to change the topic to something ISOMORPHIC to the situation.

An isomorphic metaphor is one that is similar in structure, but different in content. So in other words, instead of telling a chick to get attracted to some quality you have, you tell a story about someone who noticed that quality in you, or you tell a story about how important that quality is for someone else, and how to notice it when you're looking at it right now.

It's much less intrusive to use an isomorphic example.

In other words, assuming you are communicating with them properly and already have rapport with them, if you start digging in people's emotions they're not ready to uncover, they might resist. So if you find resistance, that tells you where the greatest leverage is, where the greatest possibility to uncover the true person beneath all the pretenses and smoke screens... Where their energy is blocked off and shut down, where if you can open that doorway inside their mind, you both will be amazed by the experience you share with each other.

So sometimes you ease off and go to another topic that is still important to them, but they don't feel “threatened” by revealing that information because it's a “normal topic,” not something they're trying to hide from...

So I found out what my friend's unfulfilled needs and desires were by talking to him about what was important for him in his job...

He had trouble at first...

Then he went deep inside and was surprised to find out he had never stopped to discover what was truly important to him – in ANY area of his life! He had been living on auto-pilot for so long he had never stopped to figure out where he wanted to go and how to get there.

So sometimes when you're asking questions, IF YOU HAVE RAPPORT ALREADY, and the person shows resistance, sometimes that resistance is because they really are not aware of the answer.

Well once my friend actually EXPERIENCED the power of those meaningful AND SINCERE questions coming from someone you're in rapport with, he decided maybe it was a useful exercise to do after all!

(Chunk UP here: This is not just about using questions to find out someone's criteria and values in a relationship. It IS about the power of using genuine, sincere, probing questions while in rapport with someone to get to know them and to unlock the inner parts of their mind and emotions!)

Now why did I say this wouldn't work with the Mystery Method?

Because they tell you to ask a chick a question, and then interrupt her before she even has a chance to answer!

Like I said, I'm NOT bashing them. I bought the book, I like it.

And there IS a time and a place to ask someone a question and then interrupt them before they have a chance to answer – for example, if you want them to go in to a transderivational search and then interrupt them and continue with your suggestions and your normal conversation. However, what the book says to do is to just ask a question as an opener, and then interrupt her before she has a chance to answer, as a way of forcing an opening for a conversation.

I can tell you I've had much more enjoyable conversations and experiences with women asking them about things I'm truly interested about them instead of “setting them up”...

One more note here: when people tell you situational openers (using what's going on in the situation with her right now) won't work, they just don't know how to do it.

One of the first exercises in the Ross Jeffries Speed Seduction \(TM\) Home Study Course is to sit down with the flash cards and the workbook and write out language patterns and linking patterns ... Including “It's just like when ...”

Do you have any idea how many people buy that course and pay a few hundred bucks for it and don't do the damn drills?

So, anyway, back to the show...

Dr. Phil asked three of the women what their experience was after being talked to by guys trained in The Mystery Method while in a club.

And, by the way, here's one thing I really do like about the way they do their training: They will take guys out where there are lots of women, and they go through walkups and conversations with them and give them suggestions on how to be more effective right then and there, while they're actually DOING the techniques.

Apparently one guy did the job right: His chick said she actually thought the guy was truly interested in her opinion. (Although once she found out he had gotten training in seduction, she no longer thought he gave a damn about her as a person, which is one real good reason why you should NEVER tell anyone you're learning seduction skills...)

And by the way, it's OKAY to have some “canned material”. Friends naturally talk about the same topics and themes all the time anyway. So do people who are in love with each other. The very best and most effective sales people and presenters have “canned materials” they use; but they also know how to USE the materials and adapt them to their audiences, to the people they're actually speaking with.

One of the best resources on the planet for cold walkups where you've never seen or met the woman before is a CD set Ross Jeffries recorded a few years ago.

I don't know how many of you watched “The Pickup Artist” on VH1, and by the way, Mystery is real good at what he does (and in case you didn't know he is NOT with The Mystery Method anymore and has his own website), but on one of the episodes, and I realize they do edit things for tv, even so-called “reality shows,” but what bugged the hell out of me was the episode where those guys were on a bridge in the middle of the day, trying to start a conversation with women as they were walking by...

Hell, they should have just bought everyone a copy of Ross Jeffries' Gold Walkup CD's and had them study those before going out.

So canned material can be real good. Especially when you know how to adapt it to the person you're talking with, AND you have a genuine interest in their responses so you can get to know what kind of person they are deep down inside.

What bothers me, though, is when the canned material is only designed to set her up for the next pattern or routine, without any consideration of the actual person you're talking with. Or if it consists of blowing lies out your ass just to get your dick wet.

Have some self-respect and some integrity. It will pay off now AND in the long run.

So instead of just trying to set her up to “get her,” instead have a genuine desire and interest in her to see how she responds, and then use her responses to increase the attraction between the two of you.

Sometimes you might decide you don't like her responses, so you can excuse yourself and find someone else to go talk with.

Actually knowing how to weed out the psychos and the wackos sure is a helpful skill. I cover that in the first part of my CD set on “How-To-Get Virtually Any Woman's Undivided Attention In Just 30 Seconds Or Less!” If you'd like more information on that CD set, just Click Here. It's one of the first CD sets I ever created, and it's a few years old, I recorded it on my computer with a cheap microphone, but it still has some real good information in it.

Anyway, while we're on the topic of asking women questions, and doing it in a sincere, interested manner, one that demonstrates rapport and demonstrates YOU TRULY UNDERSTAND HER, let's talk about questions some more...

Dr. Phil asked the women who agreed to be on the show what their experience was like while the guys were talking with them, what worked that interested them.

One woman was trying to answer what the guy said that really interested her, and she wasn't quite sure how to say it...

Here's an interesting factoid for you: WOMEN USUALLY DON'T KNOW WHY THEY'RE ATTRACTED TO SOMEONE.

Attraction happens at the subconscious level and the energy level, then the conscious mind has to come up with “excuses” and “reasons why” it must be so, and if they don't come up with “some reason,” they might talk themselves out of it later.

Advertising copywriters have know about this for decades: There's the reason a person tells his family and friends why he buys something, and then there's the REAL reason.

Most women (AND MEN!) are walking around in an unaware state of mind. They have no idea why they do the things they do or respond the way they do.

Just being aware of those things puts you in a position of power and gives you knowledge that at least 90 percent of the people on the planet don't have...

Once you become AWARE, you then have the choice to DO SOMETHING!

Well, anyway, the woman said some story about long and short fingers was interesting.

SO, hey, the guy who was talking with them did a damn good job of building interest. And by the way, I'm astounded by how many people can't recall the contents of a conversation. So for her to forget the conversation and just remember the emotions and feelings shouldn't be surprising...

Well, when Dr. Phil asked her what caused her to be interested in the guy, and she was trying to explain how she got attracted to the guy, Scott jumped in and attempted to validate the technique, as if he were embarrassed or ashamed of her answer and wanted to look good by validating the technique.

I'm not bashing the guy; I tend to get defensive at times also, and he sure has some brass balls for going on national television when the topic of the show is stacked against him.

Now if you saw the show, you also know Ross Jeffries jumped in at various times also, however he only did so when he was being interrupted, and you'll notice he was NOT on the defense. You might also say he was trying to slit the competition's throats, that the entire show was stacked against the guys from The Mystery Method...

But Ross was not trying to get affirmation from others or gain approval from anyone regarding what he does or how he does it (although he probably did want others to agree with his opinion of the "competition" – I don't know; you'll have to ask Ross Jeffries that question. At any rate, the show was damn good free advertising and publicity for BOTH of them. It would cost a small fortune to buy that much publicity on national tv in the middle of the day).

Anyway, instead of worrying about covering his ass, Ross was more interested in getting his message across.

To put it in words similar to ones he might use: He was speaking his truth.

There's a huge difference in walking through the world trying to defend, validate yourself, and gain approval from others vs. walking through the world with the kind of confidence that comes from the place of power and authority that only comes with experience.

This applies to every area of life; not just seduction.

Notice the guys who are interested in learning and having fun tend to almost always do better with seduction materials – regardless of who they're learning from – than those who are worried about getting “shot down” or worried about “getting caught” running game on a woman.

By the way, if you are worried about “getting caught” running seduction patterns while talking with a woman, you got to get my CD set on “How To Get Virtually Any Woman's Undivided Attention In Just 30 Seconds Or Less!”

Onward.

It was said of British Field Marshal Montgomery that he was more concerned with 'not losing' than he was with winning...

Now in all fairness, Ross Jeffries has had much, Much, MUCH more experience being interviewed on tv and radio shows.

But when you chunk down to the seduction level, one on one with a person, the frame you set makes a world of difference.

So instead of trying to demonstrate or prove your value or to use your “game” to boost a fragile ego, what if, instead, you had a position of authority. Not a “down bitch!” type of authority, but the kind of authority that comes when you really and truly know and understand how to touch a person deeply, in ways they've never experienced before.

When you truly know and understand what is going on deep down inside them – secrets they probably aren't even aware of yet.

Because when you know how to do that, you really don't have to worry if others approve of you or whether they are smart enough to recognize your value. YOU become the one with choice and power.

So what was Ross Jeffries doing there on the Dr. Phil show, anyway?

Was he there simply to take pot-shots at the competition?

I mean, hey, some say he is an arrogant, egotistical bastard. Just for laughs, go read the book “The Game”. It's a real fun read on the seduction community.

Anyway, if Scott and Nick had done their homework, they might have had a rebuttal when Ross said they use lines on women that are not true.

Ross has been teaching the “quotes pattern” for years. “My friend Suzie told me the other day...” Sure, he has newer stuff; it's still in his courses, though.

It used to really bother me, because I was like, “Damn! I can't say that, I don't have a friend Suzie, and she wasn't talking to me about that...”

Then again, the Bible is full of “lies”. Jesus told parables all the time. Did the stories really happen? Or were the principles valid even if the actual events never took place?

There are, however, differences between stories that are out-right lies that are designed to set someone up with little or no regard to them as a person vs. stories and metaphors designed to bring out resources from inside the person to help them enjoy what they already want anyway, even if they're not aware of it yet.

Anyway, in all fairness, I don't know if they realized they were going in to the Lion's Den there or not.

Again, his focus was on his message, on his outcome.

I also believe, whether you like him as a person or not, he has incredibly good materials. When I got his Speed Seduction \(TM\) Deluxe Home Study Course, I spent hours every day doing the written exercises and doing the exercises in to a tape recorder while driving, I took the home study tapes with me to work out, I took them with me in my truck, I played them in my room, I played the tapes so many times I wore them out in just about 4 or 5 months. And if you want to REALLY learn from what he teaches, start to pay attention to the language patterns he uses all the time.

Besides, if you're going to pay your hard-earned bucks for seduction materials, go learn from someone who actually gives you tools to improve yourself so you become the type of person others are naturally attracted to anyway.

But if you're just some sleaze ball who wants to take advantage of other people just because you can, then please don't learn those skills, and please don't buy my materials either!

What really irked me was the story about the woman who got “seduced” by a guy who ripped her off for $100,000. (I'll bite my lip and not say anything regarding her falling for his line of B.S. even after she KNEW the guy was lying to her...)

I mean, come on, Phil, that's a bit sleazy, don't you think, trying to compare that guy to those of us who learn seduction techniques so we can more easily connect with women, so we can make our relationships with women more enjoyable – not just for ourselves – but for the women also!

And some of you are going, “Yeah, that woman's a nut-job...otherwise she wouldn't ah been screwed over so easily...” (no comment here on that!)

But think about it...

Anyone who uses deceit and trickery to get in a woman's pants is a sleaze.
(Any woman who uses deceit and trickery to take advantage of a man is ALSO a sleaze!)

And just because some women use sex to manipulate and take advantage of guys doesn't make it "fair game" to do the same back to them.

What I also find interesting, is that after you start to have more success with seduction materials, and if you're truly using the materials you study to transform yourself from the inside out, in to the type of person you want to become, you will find there are things you will no longer tolerate or put up with.

Because as you start to grow in to the person YOU desire to be, you suddenly like and appreciate and value yourself more and more and more, and you simply refuse to settle for the way things used to be.

So, interestingly enough, those women who are just out to use you become less appealing, and you start to focus on the types of women you DO like and appreciate.

There's an "appreciation" or "blessing" drill my good friend Dr. John M. La Tourette teaches, a form of "mental broadcasting" where you go to a special level of mind where your conscious mind, your subconscious mind, and your higher self are all hooked up and connected at what some call "Higher Intelligence," others call "The Non-Local Universe," others call it "The subjective level of mind," or "The Zero Point Energy Field," or perhaps some other name, and when you know how to get to that level of mind, you can communicate directly with the other person's subconscious mind, and at the energy level, which is where all attraction starts anyway.

(Language patterns are ALSO a form of energy, and a way to elicit energy states...)

You can use that method to communicate with compatible partners – whether for long term relationships, a sex buddy, or any other type of relationship, at night, while they sleep, even if you haven't met each other yet.

(Dr. La Tourette is world-renowned as “The Speedman,” the creator of “Speed Hitting,” and he's also a hypnotist, has a Ph.D. In sports psychology, along with many other credentials he's earned in the 40 or so years he's been doing hypnosis, ESP, and mind control. And back when he used to train at the Speed Life seminars, he was voted favorite trainer 5 years in a row. The man is truly a world-class trainer. Do whatever it takes to get to one of his seminars!)

For more information on Dr. La Tourette's many credentials he's earned, products and seminars, please Click Here...

Anyway, you can communicate with others, using a “Dream Invaders” Technique.

I remember when I first got training on how to do dreamtime seduction.

It was in June of 2000, at Ross Jeffries very first Magick and Psychic Influence seminar.

The ding dong only charged like $495 bucks for the thing, and it lasted all weekend.

I don't know what the hell he was thinking.

Anyway, he taught us a couple of different tactics for doing a dreamtime seduction influence, among many other things...

So I went back and tried it out on the chick who used to cut my hair. I did it the night before going in there, and I don't recall if I did it two nights in a row or not.

(By the way, I do have a free video clip online you can watch if you would like some free information about Dream Invaders for seduction. Here's the clip to that free video, and check out my other videos on there, and my videos on youtube.com also: here's the free video clip on Dream Invaders on Revver.com and here's the link to my free video clips on youtube.com.)

I did the dream seduction drills Ross taught me and then went in to get my hair cut the next day.

I've never seen someone's jaw drop open so quickly nor seen them so shocked to see someone.

There are additional language patterns I could have used to accelerate the effect after she dreamed about me.

I screwed up, and I learned a lot too.

The place I used to get my hair cut closed down, and I lost contact with her. I've noticed since then, however, that even if I've screwed things up with someone, as long as they aren't completely pissed off, you can still oftentimes fix things between the two of you, almost like your very own version of the Bill Murray movie "Groundhog Day".

Anyway, because of being on email lists Ross was on, I started reading emails from Dr. La Tourette, and that September or October, I went to a seminar Doc taught in Missouri on Silva Ultramind ESP and Huna and Manifestation.

I've been studying psychic influence, covert influence, and mental training with Doc ever since. (For more information on Dr. La Tourette and information on how to train with him, Click Here.)

And I've also put together a Dream Invaders course for seduction. The "Crash Course" is my most popular course, and you can find it at www.dreaminvaders.com and while you're at it, go to www.clickbank.com and sign up for the affiliate program, get 50% commission when you refer your friends to my most popular course, now available for instant download on Clickbank. Or if you prefer to get the full Dream Invader Seminar, along with bonuses, check out my Deluxe Dream Invader course by clicking here.

Anyway, to get right down to the heart of the matter, there are many seduction systems out there. Some of them are better than others. Just remember you don't have to settle for sleaze tactics and deception in order to seduce the women you want to be with. Remember, women are people also, and you sure as hell wouldn't like it very much if women lied to you, took advantage of you, and used sleaze tactics to get you to do what they want you to do. So treat women like people. Most of them deserve at least that much respect.

Above all else, be true to yourself and your values and your ideals. If you are not happy and proud of the person you see in the mirror every day, you sure do have the ability to DO something about it.

If you've enjoyed this report, you may feel free to post it on your blog, newsletter, website, or online group as long as you do not alter the contents in any way and as long as you post this entire document in its pdf format. If you want to reproduce this report in a printed format, please write to me first.

If you'd like to comment about this report, either write to me at jim (at) mindcontrolresources (dot) com or go to my new blog at www.thepickupartistreviews.com and leave your comments. No spam please; it would just get deleted from the blog anyway.

And remember to sign up for the Dream Invader “Crash Course” affiliate program and refer all your friends!
Now go have fun!

Sincerely,
Jim Knippenberg
www.mindcontrolresources.com
www.dreaminvaders.com
www.thepickupartistreviews.com